STRENUOUS SPORTS.

I'd hate to be a wrestler and strain my blooming works in swift heroic combats with Poles and frightful Turks; I've watched the wrestlers struggle for purses and for points, I've seen their straining muscles, I've heard their cracking joints; desire to be a wrestler within my bosom sours; I'd rather be a peeler, and sleep for thirty hours. I'd hate to be a fighter, and train for weeks and weeks, to have my nose kerflummixed and spread upon my cheeks. I've seen the pug in action, I've seen him in repose, I've seen him running naked. I've seen him wearing clothes, and far from his profession I'll surely try to keep; I'd rather be a peeler, and sleep, and sleep, and sleep. I'd hate to be a walker, though Weston makes it pay; I'd hate to reel and totter upon an endless way; to tumble into ditches, and sidestep auto-cars, to live on prunes and water, and cut out all cigars; O let the other fellows across the country walk! I'd rather be a peeler, and sleep around a block. (Copyright, 1910, by George Matthew Adams.) WALT MASON.
